WORKING PAPERS

Generative AI and Labor Markets: Wages, Informality, and Causal Evidence from Latin America 2026

Job market paper. Third revised version, August 2026.

- First causal estimates of the effect of large language models on employment and wages outside the OECD: a continuous-treatment difference-in-differences design, estimated country by country on harmonized labor force surveys from eight Latin American countries (2021–2025), with the occupational exposure score of Eloundou et al. as the dose.
- Exposure lowers the formal monthly wage in six of the eight countries while informal wages rise in three; an individual-level composition test locates the adjustment at the entry margin. The formal–informal decomposition, which high-income economies cannot support, is the central contribution.
